Rewald, lawyer fight request for 'gag order'

The "gag order" sought by the prosecution in the Ronald Rewald trial would deny Rewald and his lawyers their First Amendment rights of free speech, they said in an argument filed yesterday in U.S. District Court.

in court

"Preventing a defendant from publicly proclaiming that he is innocent of the charges against him is more reminiscent of the Soviet Union or South Africa than the United States of America," said Federal Public Defender Michael R. Levine, Rewald's court-appointed attorney.

Besides, Levine said, the court can sequester the jurors, keeping them in private quarters and away from the media, to ensure that they are unaffected by publicity during the trial.

He said the request was premature at best, because the government had no evidence that defense counsel had violated any ethical rules relating to publicity. He said most publicity about the case had come from persons not allied with Rewald.

The government last week asked U.S. District Judge Harold Fong to bar Rewald and all lawyers, witnesses, investigators, court officials and jurors

Barnes told the network he was recruited for the killing while working as a guard in the Hawaii prison where Rewald was being held on state theft charges in connection with the collapse of his company.
